

Things you are proud of:

Since beginning my pathology career in 1975, my passion has been teaching, expanding diagnostics in Pakistan, research, and establishing international collaborations to bring global developments to students and the general public.

I've been deeply involved in education, and training undergraduate and postgraduate students. This started with establishing a diagnostic lab, which evolved into the Chughtai Institute of Pathology, offering undergraduate and postgraduate programs.

As an active member of the Pakistan Association of Pathologists, I've organized high-profile international conferences and facilitated long-term collaborations with the College of Physicians and Surgeons and Royal College of Pathologists. This has helped groom young pathologists, with several passing their FRCPATH exams.

My goal is to make the Chughtai Institute a globally recognized center for research, diagnostics, and postgraduate training.
